Written for the 2026 countdown to BDT 2026 in Scottsdale

It's a common source of debate on tour: should there be a penalty for playing sober, or actually is playing sober a penalty in itself?!

Some Dogs are unequivocal about their position with Robbo being particularly vocal about the issue – "Demon Repellent" is an absolutely vital weapon in his tour golf armoury. In his story below, he explains why!

ROBBO

"Mallorca 2006 - Royal Bendinat GC - on the eve of final round.

The game sitting 4½ points to 3½ points in the Retrievers' favour, excitement was building for a great final day. The singles were drawn out over lunch and produced some classic match-ups.

In my fourball and playing for the Retrievers was my old partner in crime BT; he had drawn Purlo out of the hat and I had been fortunate enough to get a chance to get at young Ash. A fourball that was likely to produce some quality golf, great laughs and perhaps a little squabbling. Perfect, the day was set.

During the meal BT and I swapped stories about our youth, ones that you have all heard before (BT pooing on the AstroTurf steps etc) and banter was great. The usual drinking games commenced after and life was good. Not looking to end the night early, Taylor and I took the half hour taxi ride to Magaluf to relive more of our youth.

A few more beers wandering around the streets of Magaluf and we bumped into BCM, Biggest Club Mallorca. We both thought that 20 dogs a man was a tad harsh on price for 2 hours dancing. The doorman then went on to explain that it was free drinks while we were in the establishment, we were in like Flynn.

A quick scout around the dance floor produced nothing, the birds looked like they'd been cocked more times than John Wayne's shotgun, so the bar welcomed us like an old friend.

Several 'snot the lots' later I was on the rails, legs had gone and BCMs felt a mile away from home, it was, well 20 to be precise. We called an end to the proceeding at 6 and set off home, with Oli. Not sure where Big Ols came from but he was definitely there.

The only reason why I knew Big Ols was in attendance is another story.

We finally landed back in Portals Nous at 8.30 am. No time for sleep as we had the final day to play and the coach was due in two hours.

A cold shower and a glass of wine over Breakfast set us up well for a day at the course. If I remember rightly we had an early tee time due to an England football match in the afternoon, one which Marshy was particularly looking forward to.

The amazing final day

BT and I then had the longest drive comp to compete for off the first, both still battered and a starter to watch us, great! Unbelievably mine flew off down the middle and I came out the winner, happy dogs and game on.

We both started to concentrate on the game in hand and as ever I started to produce my best golf while under the influence. I was out of the blocks and flying 6 up after 9, 2 over par and Ash was on the ropes.

It was then that the night before wore off; at the turn I was close to collapsing, I don't think I finished the next 4 holes and Ash was seriously back in the game. I hit my all-time tour low when I was spewing up on the 15th tee bed; not even the image of Big Ols, from the night before with an old bird who'd seen more stiffs than Quincy could raise my spirits. I quickly scoured the horizon between spews for the refreshments man selling cans of demon repellent, but my luck was out.

By the 17th tee I was 1 up with 2 to play, my early form had deserted me and I was in a battle. Ash was grinning, his 13 diet cokes from the night before hadn't seemed to affect him that much. I knew I needed a good hole, and the par 3 17th had to be it. I can't remember what weapon I hit but it was stiff and Ash was beaten. I'd come through an unbelievable low to grab a point for the team, 34 points for myself and, unbelievably, the individual trophy.

All smiles, claps and the usual banter of better luck next time. Back into the bar to watch England and laugh at Big Ols!

The final day was amazing, see the results below.

The 24 hours had produced some great highs and some terrible lows but I'd do it all again!!! Especially with you lot."
