Spewing

32

Across the tours · Featuring Boysie, Charlie, Robbo, Marshy, Langers, Fred, Langers & Bean

Written for the 2026 countdown to BDT 2026 in Scottsdale

Perhaps unsurprisingly we have had our fair share of spewing moments on the tour and these are only the ones that people have admitted to (or been caught in the act)!

Marshy!

Langers!

Fred's Afters!

Bean's Afters!

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Boysie | BDT 2003 | Spewing on La Manga North Course (see story below!) |
| Charlie | BDT 2003 | Spewing at La Manga (again see story below!) |
| Robbo | BDT 2006 | Spewing on 15th tee bed (Memory 23 will recount) |
| Picko | BDT 2007 | Five minute long spew on 4th tee bed at The Emirates |
| Marshy | BDT 2008 | Spewing in the bushes prior to first tee shot, Round III |
| Langers | BDT 2015 | Spewing in a cab and kipping on front lawn of PGA National |
| Fred | BDT 2018 | Sink spew after going hard during the day (evidence above) |
| Langers | BDT 2021 | Spewing in BT's room during the OC |
| Bean | BDT 2025 | Cheeky little street spew prior to going in Palais Jad Mahal |

In the tour archives we have detailed accounts of two such spews, both from the La Manga tour, so here they are; the latter comes from Charlie but, first of all, Boysie's Up!

BOYSIE

"There have been a number of tour highlights over the years and a number of tour lowlights. For me and by way of example Robbo and I being identified as homeless tramps by a lad of about 8 when we were led on a bench outside the airport at Murcia is a lifetime low. Taking fines for being a "short" tourist at Lagos wasn't great.

Climbing the large hill in Mallorca at Son Termens only to discover that I had missed the par 3 twelfth was not good. The distances to the golf courses in Lisbon were memorable for all the wrong reasons.

Undoubtedly, however, my lowlight came in the first round at La Manga.

La Manga was a seven-day Tour in summer 2003. It was also mid-summer and bloody warm. Naturally everyone was keen for the smash and as there were a number of new faces it was important that we had a good drink in anticipation of the golf to follow.

The opening night commenced with a few "cheekies" outside the apartments before heading up to the piano bar. From there and following a good sing along by all the dogs we hit the La Manga campus nightclub where The Monkey proceeded to blow the entire kitty within 27 minutes and has never since been entrusted with it.

Many of you will know that I usually have a bit of a problem with the "get up" on the first morning of Tour; that I am horribly hung over and there is not much interest in carrying a heavy bag around a golf course in searing summer heat. Nevertheless that is what Tour entails and it is part of the fun.

I need to give this Tour tale a bit of context. I was the returning champion. I had beaten all comers in Marbella and had a title to defend. Notwithstanding my desire to retain my title I had played no golf in preparation. Error.

The first round was played on the "North Course". For those of you who have not played the North Course, or for those who can't remember, let me tell you or remind you of the first hole. It is approximately 400 yards long and straight. I think the green was the scene of Robbo's infamous fresh air putt and the start of his nine-point round. Generally the North Course is wide and open. There is very little tree coverage and it is quite a forgiving place to have a hack.

As defending champion I had the honour of taking first swipe. Fortunately I connected and the ball disappeared somewhere up the middle. We were out of the blocks.

My first swipe was not the high point or the low point of this first round. In fact I actually played quite well despite what followed. The problems started at about the time that I had a swing at the ball for the second time. I remember going slightly dizzy and feeling a bit nauseous. Better out than in I thought and so having excused myself from my playing partners I had a little tactical sickness under the trees on the right side of the first. Jolly good. Job done I believed. Wrong.

For the next 10 holes I hit a shot and had some sick; hit a shot and had some sick; hit a shot and had some sick, including one particularly memorable occasion when in a bunker on the fifth or the sixth I hit a shot, fell over in the sand and, you guessed it, had some sick.

Never in all my days have I experienced anything like it. By the tenth I had walked off. I fell asleep in some shade under a tree before I was woken by an English couple who suggested that I should probably seek urgent medical assistance. Declining their kind offer to drive me to the on-site Doctor I retreated to the bar and decided that in actual fact having had a little snooze I could probably manage a lager, which is what I did."

Remarkably, Boysie's was not the only spewing incident in La Manga. Charlie takes us through his own first experience of tour golf on what was his debut tour:

CHARLIE

"As I try to put together which tour was which, what round was where, you soon realise how far the Big Dogs Tour has become since the early days.

Ah yes, the early days, AKA: La Manga. As this is the one tour that doesn't seem to be blurred with Lagos, Vilamoura and Mallorca memoirs, I can vividly pick out a particular low point.

The evening was the night before the third round and the introduction of the soon-to-be customary order of 12 bottles of Rose as a starter at every meal. As a new strategy of the Tour in order to find some wind, it quickly became an exercise in how quickly all bottles could be polished off before informing Stavros to raid the cellar of the seafood restaurant for 12 more.

> Roughly 90 mins later, 12 charged up dawgs were ready to reacquaint themselves with Spikes bar and the subsequent order of 12 large Vodka Red Bulls every five mins. This particular evening was an attempt to drink the bar dry to enable us to finally allow the staff to let Elton Ravo perform his anthem (as Ash describes elsewhere, it would take a few more nights and plenty of euros to do so however!).
>
> A couple of hours into the Spikes session, all was not good and a need to ‘create some drinking space' became particularly apparent. Rather than be caught by an unsuspecting Retriever over trap two emptying the contents of my stomach lining, I managed to drag myself back to the golf villa and violently projectile vomit in peace and quiet, admittedly through burning nostrils and streaming eyeballs. Returning to the action, and only Rodney Dog suspecting my disappearing act, I cracked on where I left off.
>
> My next memory is waking up on a wall, a beaming flash light zorbing through my eyeballs thanks to the security guard, and about three naked arses running around the place, with another flashlight in hot pursuit. The security guard had his work cut out that night - how I ended up in my kennel I have no idea.
>
> I am relieved to say the resulting golf the next day at the North Course doesn't get a mention in the Big Dogs Tour Results as it is vivid only for the first three holes and was undoubtedly the worst round I've ever played.
>
> Playing against Robbo and Marshy (I think the playing partner was Permatan) who were all also in a world of pain, I managed to scrape a six on the 1st hole somehow. 2nd hole, the par 3, I managed to four putt and another juicy six. I must also add that this was the same round/hole where Robbo managed to pull off his infamous freshie with his putter!!
>
> Moving on, 3rd hole - sliced the drive, standard. 2nd shot, a cracking 6 iron out of the rough to the green that all dawgs followed with eager anticipation, only to realise some five seconds later having not witnessed the pin rattle, that I never hit the bloody thing and there she was staring back up at me.
>
> A serious freshie of the finest order and from which I never recovered! Some seriously p!ssed up dawgs that day and a round which I completely switched off from and was probably piggy-backed around for the rest.
>
> Can’t wait to get back involved lads and let the good times roll!”

Thankfully these days we are a lot more sensible than in our younger days and I am sure that there will be no Scottsdale spewing!

