One Long Poo

Another Poo Is Needed Imminently!

It was BDT 2010 and we were making our way to Girona via the usual dual departures of northern and southern flights plus our international jet-setters. The UK flights were landing at roughly the same time, with internationals Charlie and Knoxy not long behind, so the London lot sat down for a couple of beers whilst we awaited the various arrivals. Gav would be turning up late on his first tour, which may be dealt with in another memory...

The Northern Dogs duly landed in Girona and it wasn't long before everyone noticed they were one Dog light! 'Light' is the appropriate word here, as the Dog in question thought he would 'lighten the load' before boarding the plane in Manchester, having decided he had enough time to drop the kids off at the last minute.

This was potentially the single greatest error of judgement in BDT history as inexplicably Boysie missed his flight for what turned out to be the most expensive Douglas Hurd he's ever had! Showing much sympathy with Boysie's plight, the Dogs took a few photos to remind him that he was rapidly falling behind on the beers front, even counting the number for him!

One, two, three and counting....!

There were no other flights available that day and so Boysie eventually joined us the following day shortly before we were about to tee off for Round I, strolling towards us in a pair of deck shoes, paper tucked under his arm, with no clubs, golf shoes or clothes (these had not arrived with him!) yet still somehow grinning!

Boysie Finally Makes It To Girona!

In the aftermath of the tour a summary was circulated highlighting Boysie's tour adventures which, to be fair, he stayed incredibly calm about (although in hindsight it's surprising he ever wanted to tour again!).

Boysie's 2010 tour in bullet form:

- Misses plane to Girona, as he was having a Forrest
- Sees the Easyjet lady close the door to the plane and she won't re-open it to let him on… but remains calm
- Calmness remains for a further two hours, although his bag, which they had to take off the plane, has still not been returned
- Loses rag with said Easyjet lady after two and a half hours, with said bag still to arrive
- Drives home and books onto a flight for the following morning (another £200 or so)
- Arrives at airport in plenty of time the following morning, to ensure lightning does not strike twice
- Arrives in Girona to find that his golf clubs and bag have not
- Gets his ass whooped at golf in Round I, won in Round II, lost in Round III
- Has to go 'commando' on successive days
- Forced to borrow Oli's socks (a sheer act of desperation for anyone!)
- Gets fined for being late on tour
- Two nights of smash and a good craic
- Gets the Poodle prize for only touring for two nights
- Wins the St Bernard Trophy for a pin-seeking iron
- At the end of the tour, finds out his return flight has been cancelled
- Books onto another flight to Luton 11 hours later
- This flight is then delayed
- Arrives at Luton to find the place is like a football match, as every plane is landing there, 30 minute disembarkation and 50 minute wait at passport control
- Three hour drive from Luton to Liverpool
- 45 minute drive from Liverpool back home, arriving circa 6am
- His bag and golf clubs have still not turned up
- Rag lost again!

As an aside, we now have an idea of what Boysie's face would have looked like in Trap 2 at Liverpool airport, thanks to this portrait photo from BDT 2019, which Brian was most resistant to being taken as he was completely desperate for a dump at the time! Check out the now-infamous photo above!
